Patrick Hoier, MSHCE, BS, RCIS, CTAE, FSICP, FACVP

Experienced Invasive Cardiovascular Technologist and Cardiac Electrophysiology Technologist with a demonstrated history of working in the higher education industry. Skilled in Medical Ethics, Scholarly Research, Lecturing, Presentation Skills, Curriculum Development, Course Management, and Adult Learning. Professional certifications include Registered Invasive Cardiovascular Specialist, Certified Trainer and Examiner in Cardiovascular Medical Simulation, and Post-Secondary Instructor Credential. Strong professional with a Master of Science in Health Care Ethics from Creighton University and working towards a Doctor of Public Health (DrPH) from Capella University.

Megan Hunsinger, EdD, MBA, MS, RCIS, RCES, CRAT

Dr. Hunsinger holds a BS in Exercise Science from Bloomsburg University and then earned her master's degree in Exercise Physiology from East Stroudsburg University. She worked in hospitals for five years performing exercise stress testing before graduating from the Invasive Cardiovascular Technology program at the Sentara School of Health Professions, when she became credentialed as a Registered Cardiovascular Invasive Technologist and worked in the cardiac catheterization lab. She became an instructor of invasive cardiovascular technology Megan Hunsinger, EdD, MBA, MS, RCIS, RCES, CRAT at Sentara College of Health Sciences. She was promoted to Program Coordinator and then completed her doctorate in Education Leadership and Management from Capella University, in 2014, and in 2017 earned a second master’s degree in Business Administration with a focus on Healthcare Administration through Western Governors University. She is now the Chair of the School of Allied Health at Sentara College of Health Sciences.